Our Missionary Fields

INDIA.

"It is generally thought," says Brigadier Yessu Ratnum, of South India, "that the Pular, belonging to a serf caste of the Malayalam country, has little intelligence; this is a great mistake. The testimonies I heard in a recent meeting were remarkable. One heathen convert told us that when the Army first came he was quite indifferent—a drunkard and a thief—but his wife went to the meeting, and eventually got converted. Then she started to pray for him. He became interested, and went to see for himself, which ended in his also getting saved. He said his heart was changed, and he had got deliverance from sin."

"A woman who had walked four miles to be present, was asked whether her husband was there also. She replied by saying that her husband was a devil-dancer, and added that she was praying for his salvation. When she first went to the meetings he beat her; but, having found salvation, she felt she ought to continue to attend. Her faithfulness and consistency are evidently telling upon him. 'For,' said she, 'he does not beat me so much now.'"

The following incidents give further evidence of the devotion and sincerity of our Indian soldiery:

A girl who was staying in our school at Tharakundu, and who gave promise of being very clever and useful, was attacked one morning with cholera, and although all human aid was given, it soon became evident that she had not recovered. She said that she had no fear, as she was only going to her God. She died the same night. Her father is a beautifully-saved soldier. When an officer went to console with him, he said, "It is like saying good night to her; I shall meet her again in the Morning."

A Local Officer, a fine man in the prime of life, said, "Don't give me any more medicine; I am dying, but I have no fears; I am trusting in Jesus, but (turning to his brother) you must look after my children, and always be true to God and the Army."

In connection with our hospital in South India, Adj. (Dr.) Turner has recently started a Medical Class, with six students, all of whom are officers—five natives and one Swede.

The hospital maintains its popularity, and signs are not wanting that an impression is being made by it on the high-caste people who attend for treatment. A rich Sudra (the headman of a large village) recently invited the Medical and Territorial Staff to dinner. After providing them with a large dinner the officers retired to a large room, and his friends were admitted. He then told us that he had invited us not merely out of gratitude for help received from the hospital, but because he wished us to understand he was in sympathy with our work. He understood that our business was making bad people into good people. He could testify to the changed lives of some of our converts. He prayed God that not only might we continue to be a blessing, but that we might ourselves be blessed. He had once thought General Booth to be an ordinary man, but he now looked upon him as a divine man.

Coming as this statement did from such an influential man, and being given in the presence of his fellow-caste people, it could not fail to produce a big impression.

In a village in South India, which had been practically free from cholera, although the epidemic was very prevalent in surrounding villages, the people are putting in, at their own expense, a new concrete floor in the barracks as a thank-offering to God for having preserved them from the scourge.—English Cry.

You cannot sop up the sins of the week with a solemn face on Sunday.

Canada's Drink Bill,

COMPARED WITH OTHER LEADING EXPENDITURES OF THE DOMINION'S POPULACE.

Liquor .....	$32,862,813
Iron and Steel Manufactures .....	27,000,000
Meat .....	22,475,000
Bread .....	21,675,000
Woolen Goods .....	21,100,000
Sawed Lumber .....	19,797,000
Boots and Shoes .....	18,000,000
Cotton Goods .....	13,803,000
Sugar and Molasses .....	9,767,000
Schools .....	8,000,000
Christian Missions .....	6,000,000

These figures and spaces show that the Canadian people spend more for intoxicating drinks than for any other class of manufactures; ten millions more for liquor than for meat; $11,000,000 more for liquor than for bread or woolen goods. They spend more for drinks than for all the lumber they annually use for building their houses, and barns, and fences, and for making their furniture; more than twice as much for alcohol as for cottons; more than three times as much as for sugar; and while they spend $8,000,000 for education, they spend four times as much for drink. The drink bill of the Dominion is twelve millions in excess of the entire assessable property, real and personal, of Halifax! The direct cost for the maintenance of prisons and asylums, and the loss of labor, is another item in the drink bill of the country, which would swell the total financial loss caused by the liquor traffic to an even more enormous sum, and the financial loss after all is the smallest evil of the whole business.

One million dollars' worth of distilled liquor gives employment to but 110 men, and pays but $46,566 in wages, whereas every million dollars' worth of useful articles yields employment to 1,530 hands, and expends in wages $518,544.—Ex.

Must a Woman Always Keep Silence in Church?

(We reprint herewith a very sensible answer given to an oft repeated question, by the Sunday School Times.—Ed.)

A question that has been in discussion among Christians for at least eighteen centuries is whether it is ever proper for women to teach in public. On this point intelligent and right-minded Christians have never agreed. As to whether they are likely to agree in the next eighteen centuries, intelligent Christians differ widely. Here comes a Christian woman in Kansas who is troubled because one commentator has a positive opinion on the subject:

"I have been reading the words of a commentator on 1 Cor. xiv. 34, 35 and 1 Tim. ii. 11, 12, on which he makes a statement like this: 'Spiritually-minded persons, who rightly understand truth and duty, will acknowledge that the directions given by Paul about women keeping silent in the church are commendations of God, which all should obey.' Surely he cannot mean such women as Miss Willard, Mrs. Booth, Miss Alice Bryman Condit, M.D., women Sunday School teachers, missionaries, and active members of the Christian Endeavor Societies, are working in disobedience to God's revealed will and commandment. I shall be very thankful to you for an answer in your Notes on Open Letters."

There is no error in the Christian Church which cannot be found advocated by some prominent commentator; therefore, there is no force in the fact that a commentator says a certain thing. The real question is, What ought a wise commentator to say? We know that ordinary women are allowed no such prominence before the public in the East as is accorded to them in the world of the West. Yet we know that exceptional women in the East have been given, on occasions, as great power among men in government, for at least forty centuries, as ever among Christians of the West. What Paul's words meant, in view of local practices and prejudices, and therefore of temporary force, we cannot be sure; but we can be sure that Paul had no intention of saying that God had been at fault in what He authorized or approved in former times or later. We know that Miriam was inspired to teach and to lead Israel in public praise in the beginning of Israel's new life. We know that Deborah was chosen of God to be a leader and a judge in Israel in critical times. In the Christian dispensation, inspired Philip had four daughters who were inspired to teach. Priscilla was a prominent Christian teacher, capable of instructing Apollos. One thing is certain, Paul approved of women whom God had inspired for doing God's work in God's way (see Acts xviii. 18; xviii. 26; Rom. xvi. 3; 1 Cor. xvi. 10; 2 Tim. iv. 19). If the commentator does not understand, or cannot explain it, he is a poor, incompetent commentator. The Bible is a safer guide for Christian women than the uninspired commentator, however prominent he may be.

A pretty sure test of whether a cake is done is to touch it gently with the finger. If your touch leaves a dint the cake is not baked; if the crust springs back it is ready to take from the oven.

In trimming a kerosene lamp, remove the charred part of the wick by pinching it off with a piece of paper. If the wick is frayed, even if it with a sharp pair of scissors.

To clean linoleum take equal parts of cottonseed oil and sharp vinegar, and rub well with a flannel rag. If the linoleum is very dirty, first wash it with soap and water, or water to which a little turpentine has been added. Washing soda should not be used on linoleum, because it readily attacks oil and paint, of which this floor covering is chiefly made.

This and That.

A pound of sugar is one pint, and an ounce of liquid is two tablespoonfuls, and a pint of liquid weighs sixteen ounces.

Silver spoons that have become discolored from contact with cooked eggs, may be easily brightened with common salt. Coal gas, and the near presence of rubber in any form will cause silver to tarnish. One of the best receptacles for silver cutlery is to wrap them in a cotton flannel knife case tacked to a cupboard door.

In cleaning paint spots that will not yield to soap, try a damp cloth, wet in strong soda water and rub lightly.

A sponge may be cleaned by letting it be covered in milk for twelve hours, and then rinsing it in cold water.

Glass may be cut with a chisel if kept constantly wet with camphor gum dissolved in spirits of turpentine.

White flat-irons do not heat well turn a large dishpan over them.

For the cloth moth take special pains to clean thoroughly each crack and groove. Buy at the druggist's a few ounces of the oil of red cedar. With a small brush, such as artists use, apply the oil of cedar to all cracks and grooves in boxes and drawers, and to the tops of doors and the baseboards in closets, also around the edges of the floors. Use very little of the oil. There must not be enough to soil anything that comes in contact with the treated surface. This treatment will make closets, boxes, etc., moth-proof for some time, and if closed at once the contents will be perfectly safe through the summer and fall.

When a carpet comes to be laid afresh, the colors are apt to look as somewhat dingy, and certainly not so bright as was expected. To remedy this use a pailful of warm water containing two or three tablespoonfuls of household ammonia and a soft flannel and two fresh cloths for rubbing the carpet dry after it has been washed with the first flannel and water. But it must be remembered that certain greens will not bear ammonia; in such cases clear warm water will freshen and help the carpet very much.

When a steel gets rusty cover it with sweet oil well rubbed on; next day rub again with finely-powdered unslaked lime until all rust disappears.

The air in a damp cellar may be made drier and purer, by placing in it an open box containing fresh lime.

To mend china mix together equal parts of fine glue, white of an egg, and white lead, and with it paint the edges of the article to be mended. Press them together until hard and dry, and then scrape off the cement that sticks above the joint.

If the hair is falling out, rub the pulp of a lemon on the scalp.

Ink stains may be removed from white goods by rubbing promptly with a slice of lemon.

Alum water will restore almost any faded colors, if put into the rinsing water after the goods are washed.

When it is possible to prepare any part of a dish the day before in a leisurely way, do so. One can never guess how busy the next day may be.

To clear the premises of rats, place freshly slaked lime in their runways.

Newspapers soaked in a solution made of cayenne pepper and water, and thrust into the mice-holes will free the house of mice.

Sift graham flour before using in bread of muffins. Unless it is an unusually fine flour, it hides too much bran for the human stomach.

Thick soup is only permissible in a dinner where there is either no meat or a very light made-over meat dish. A thick cream soup is a substantial first-course in itself.

Even in tomato soup, which holds neither milk nor cream, it is best to add a pinch of soda. Others will surely add a pinch of soda, and butter will be better in the soup, and butter will be added as milk does, for it contains the same properties as cream. Add the soda to the soup just before the blending of butter and flour.

Recollections of the Far West.

BEING A COLLECTION OF GRAVE AND GAY INCIDENTS OF THE RECENT REMARKABLE TOUR OF THE COMMISSIONER AND THE RED KNIGHTS OF THE CROSS.

(By Won Orthem.)

The Western Tour of the Commissioner and the Red Knights of the Cross, once looked-for with keen anticipation, and stretching out over a period of ten weeks, is now a thing of the past, but one that will live in the memory of tens of thousands who thronged our hallings, and the hundreds who lined our penitent forms.

A Few Facts and Figures.

The tour began March 25th, and ended June 5th. It covered at its longest journeying over 8,000 miles, and included ninety meetings, aggregating a total indoor attendance of over thirty thousand people, and showing visible results in 350 men and women coming forward for purity and pardon.
These figures need no comment.

Railroad Accidents.

A railroad accident nearly promoted the Commissioner and party of three to Glory, at the beginning of the tour.
Our speed saved us in cutting clear through a freight train standing across the track, preventing the passenger cars being telescoped by a sudden stoppage of the engine. Another railway accident delayed the party from being at Fargo, as announced, and a third accident on a preceding train delayed us on our homeward journey for about three hours.

The Needs of the Inner Man.

"Gipsy," with the assistance of "Auntie" and Capt. Russell, looked after the meals when traveling. To their credit be it said that they managed to supply very nice meals at little expense. At any rate, the fact that several Red Knights weighed from ten to fifteen pounds more on their return than at the beginning of the tour, speaks well for the caterers.

A Butte Opinion of Miss Booth.

"At all three of the services held at the Auditorium yesterday by the Red Knights of the Cross the hall was filled to its capacity, and even standing room was at a premium. Commissioner Evangeline Booth was the magnet which drew the great crowds, and she was certainly at her best.

"Earnest in her pleadings, and eloquent in delivery, Miss Booth throws her whole soul into her work. With a charming presence and a personality almost indescribable, she holds her hearers spellbound, and at the close of her remarks there exists a feeling of regret that she has finished. . . .

And of the Meetings.

"A great ovation of which the local members of the Salvation Army and the visiting officials may well be proud was the meeting at the auditorium last evening. The spacious hall was taxed to its utmost standing and seating capacity to accommodate the crush of those who came to hear Miss Booth speak, and hundreds were turned away. The vocal and instrumental music was inspiring, and the powerful address of the wonderful woman-leader in the great religious movement richly impressed and moved many in the vast audience."

A Brave Boy.

A very touching sight at one of the Commissioner's meetings was that of a little boy, of about twelve years, holding up his hand boldly when Miss Booth asked for those who wanted to get saved. He marched down from the far end of the large gallery, and made his way to the penitent form.
Afterwards we found that his mother was a slinger in a concert hall of doubtful repute, but the little lad was in earnest, and meant to stay with Jesus.

The Pacific Commander.

Major Hargrave met the Commissioner at Butte, and went with her to Nelson and Roseland. He had made very admirable arrangements in every place visited in his Province, and looked well after the needs and comfort of the Commissioner and party. Biletts, halls, crowds, and finances were all very satisfactory.

Mrs. Hargrave, who was delighted to have the Commissioner stay at her home while in Spokane, sang several times during the special meetings, with her old-time sweetness and expression. Both the Major and his beloved wife were greatly pleased with the success of the tour, to which they had labored for weeks.

The Early Bird.

Passing through Missoula, we had a wait of twenty minutes, during which Ensign and Mrs. Cummins came to see the Commissioner, and took the opportunity to canvass for the Self-Denial Fund. He had started early to catch the worm, and recent returns show that he collected over $200, while his target was $140, which shows that he worked hard, long, and systematically. We were sorry the time did not permit of a meeting being held at Missoula, but keep believing,
Ensign, the future is before you.

Glorious Scenes.

The scenery of the Far West along portions of the Northern Pacific and throughout the Kootenay country is grand. Streams, rocks, mountains, valleys, lakes, and canyons meet the enraptured gaze of the dwellers of the plains, and loudly proclaim the glory of the Creator. Reluctantly the eye leaves the scene of beauty, as

The "Hoodoo," Natural Monuments, Banff.

the train rushes on, and in ecstasy we revel in Nature's handwork. Truly God spreads His Bible all around us for all mankind to read and admire.

The Rocky Mountains.

But the scenery along the C.P.R., from Vancouver to Banff, takes the palm of that of any transcontinent railway. It is simply superb. The grandeur of the lofty peaks and glaciers, the variety of formation and stretching Fraser River, and Kicking Horse Canyons, and a thousand other characteristics, make the journey delightful, no matter how often repeated. Every mile of that long journey is one of inspiration and admiration. One is sorry that some parts of it have to be spent in sleep.

900 Miles Northward by Sea.

Different somewhat, but magnificent, is the journey by boat from Vancouver to Skagway. The host, the S.S. Princess May, on which the Commissioner traveled, was greatly different from that on which she traveled with the first Klondike contingent, four years ago. Then sheep, mules, and horses were on board in profusion, accommodation limited and primitive, and the progress slow. This time we took three days instead of six, but we did not make the numerous calls which made the former journey so interesting. We were pleased to have the same Captain on board, who made us very comfortable.

Toward Alaska.

The channel lies between hundreds of islands which dot the Pacific coast.
New views continually open to the onlooker. Then one has the advantage over the railroad on deck of a ship of seeing all around at leisure.
The weather was very propitious—
calm waters, islets, bays, mountains, glaciers, sunsets, clear atmosphere,
Indian villages, playing porpoises, icebergs, and other steamers, made a great variety of attractive pictures, which, with the bracing sea breeze, made us feel at peace with all the world, and dangerously disinclined for work.

More Than Pleased.

To say that the Skagway officers were pleased to see the Commissioner and her party is to put it very mild.
Fancy better seeing a comrade-officer, a Special, a G.B.M. Agent, a D. O., or a P. O. for two years, and you will have some idea of this feeling. They made everyone feel right at home, gave the Commissioner their humble bed-room, and looked well after her temporal needs and comfort. The friends and soldiers of the city also did their best to honor their distinguished visitor, who conducted, in all, four large meetings in the Elk's Hall.

THE WAR CRY.

A Visit to a Famous Cemetery.

While at Skagway the Commissioner visited the little cemetery on the canyon, situated on the rocky hillside, with the fine Reid's Falls as a background. Here lies buried at the edge the ill-famed outlaw "Soapy Smith," who held the town in constant terror about four years ago, and by the help of his "gang" relieved many a miner of his hard-earned gold. He was at the Commissioner's open-air meeting four years ago, and afterwards paid us a visit, while camping, at midnight. A few weeks following the better element of Skagway's citizens rose up and called a mass meeting to discuss how to rid themselves of "Soapy" and his gang. The survivor, Mr. Reid, was put at the entrance of the wharf to refuse admittance to any of the outlaws. In due course Soapy Smith appeared and demanded admittance. Reid refused, shots were exchanged and both opponents fell mortally wounded. A fine monument has been erected to the memory of Frank Reid, "who gave his life for the honor of Skagway," as the epitaph on the tombstone reads.

A Dead City.

Two Danish fishermen offered their gasoline launch to take the Commissioner to Dyea, the formerly well-known city at the foot of the famed Chilkoot Pass. Dyea once made a desperate struggle to gain the ascendancy over Skagway. It began the building of a long pier to obtain the landing of steamers, but after spending about $10,000 on it they gave up, and so it stands to-day unfinished. Streets and houses, many of them with furniture inside, are deserted. Only about half a dozen white people live there now. The Chilkoot Pass is a forsaken route since the White Pass Railway has been running, and Dyea is a dead city.

Heathen Self-Sacrifice.

A touching story was told us by Susie, the Indian wife of one of the fishermen, sounding the more pathetic in its simple language. The woman's mother was the daughter of a chief of the opposite tribe. According to Indian laws, the wife and children belong to the wife's tribe, and in case of war must fight on their side. With the introduction of whiskey by traders, wars among the Chilkats became frequent, and so a feud broke out between the Frogs and the Whales, as called by the animal which the tribe had taken for their totem. Indian tradition will not allow the conclusion of peace until an even number is killed on both sides of the fighters, but a chief, or a member of a chief's family, counts for a certain number of men. So Susie's mother determined to bring the bloody struggle to a close by voluntarily giving her life in the payment of a number of men's lives of her tribe. She bade good-bye to her family and took Susie, then a babe of six months, on her back. With tear streaming down her face she rushed out, and was shot, but the baby was saved and grew up. What a sacrifice to make, and she was but a heathen, a despised Indian! It reminds one of the great love which made a sacrifice of its earthly life to make peace between earth and heaven.

Heathen Traditions are Cruel.

In spite of the spread of Christianity among the aborigines of Alaska, many heathenish and cruel practices still are practised. Only a few months ago a Christian Indian boy, of fourteen, told the missionary that he had been accused of being a witch, and so having caused the sickness of a relative. This is a trial of the medicine-man, who works himself up into frantic fits, and then accuses someone against whom he has a spite. The accused is then beaten and cruelly tortured, bound and fettered and left without food until he confesses his crime, or, in default, until he dies. Men and women are accused alike. In this case the missionary believed the boy was only frightened and that the old custom had died out, but when, after a few days, the boy did not appear, he journeyed to his village, and by the aid of a mounted policeman, forced the relatives to reveal the whereabouts. They found the boy almost doubled up, bound, and gagged, in a hole under the floor of the sick man's house, and took him away, sending him on the first steamer to Sitka, where an Indian school exists. For some days the missionary and mounted policeman had to hold off the enraged relatives at the point of the revolver, but when the boy once had been safely sent away, the missionary remained alone, and pluckily rang his church bell on Sunday, holding his services as if nothing had happened. He was not again molested.

Salvation Army Converts.

We were pleased to see the many converts which the Army has made among the Alaskan Indians, who now wear the uniform and are leading truly Christian lives. Here, at Skagway, Jim Hansen was converted, and after his conversion confessed a double murder, which had named the police. Nearly a hundred Indians of the Tlingit tribe are Salvationists. One of them had in his possession the famous Stab-Wahin Knife, which, for 200 years had been kept in the family to kill and slay, but now has been sold as a curiosity. The Indian women presented the Commissioner with one of their famous Indian spruce-root baskets, which take weeks of patient weaving to produce. Another Indian wrote:

"To Miss Eva Booth.

From John Harris Kowahiti,
A member of the Skagway Army:
"Praise the Lord I have lived to see you! I am sorry I have not had a chance to speak to you before I leave, but to-day I have to go to my fishing grounds. If I never see you again in life, I hope to meet you in heaven. God bless and keep you safe. God bless everybody!"

To ascertain whether there was any possibility of likelihood of getting through to Dawson, the writer went to White Horse, the terminus of the White Horse Railway. This railroad is undoubtedly a fine piece of engineering work. It climbs the Pass in curves, spanning precipices and clinging to the rocks in some places almost perpendicular. In other places the builders had to lower swinging scaffolds from the top of the rocks, for the men to drill holes for the blasting of a ledge for the road. The route is most picturesque and unique. The mountains seem to tower in eternal grandeur on every hand, and present a most beautiful view when one has passed the summit and leaves the highest ranges behind like a gigantic coast defence built by Supernatural hands.

White Horse.

White Horse is a small, neat town, built on the Lewis River, being the terminus of the railroad and the starting point of the river route to Dawson. Five steamers lay there to await the breaking up of the ice in Lake La Barge, which formed the only obstacle to navigation, the river being open at the time, and free from floating ice. The once-famed White Horse rapids have lost their terror, since the railroad goes past the same. At this time the ice on Lake La Barge was rotten and unsafe to cross, otherwise we might have gone a ways on the stage and taken the steamer below, as some who preceded us a few days had done. Then there was a hard trail which the mail carrier took for the time being, but that also was rendered dangerous on account of the many swollen mountain streams which had to be crossed; so immediate advance was impossible. The Commissioner, therefore, decided, after a few days' waiting, and postponed meetings at Skagway, to return.

Worked Out for the Best.

While the Commissioner deeply regretted to have to discontinue the Dawson officers and soldiers, as well as the public, it proved the best decision, as the following despatch shows:

"(Special Despatch to the Globe.)

Dawson, Y.T., June 5.—The first boat from White Horse arrived here on the 3rd inst., with one hundred and fifty passengers and one case of small pox on board. The boat was quarantined at an island five miles below Dawson.

According to this we would, at the time of writing, be in quarantine, with the prospects of returning to Toronto some time in August at the earliest.

Rossland's Health Inspector.

Speaking of small-pox reminds me of the unpleasant experience Brigadier Fugmire had with the Health Inspector at Rossland, when crossing over from Spokane. In spite of the fact that he was the first to show his arm for inspection, the official denied it upon returning to the car, and in general was very discourteous. Some local paper gave a misstatement of the incident, which showed the Brigadier in a wrong light altogether, and a Vancouver paper altogether disregarded truth in the effort to provide amusing reading to the public.

The Influence of a Sincere Christian.

I met a sailor on board ship who had been a soldier in South Africa, going there with the First Canadian Contingent. He described the following incident as one of the most touching he had ever witnessed. After the battle of Zand River, he noticed a crowd of men standing around the corpse of a private, crying and weeping. It seemed a strange sight when dead bodies of men and officers were lying all around unnoticed. He went up and asked who the private had been. "Oh, it's the fellow who always used to be talking to us about our souls," answered one, with choking voice. He was a Salvationist, whose blood-marked Bible was afterwards sent to the young woman he meant to marry on his return.

Dear Horse Gulch, White Pass, Alaska.

The Calgary Critic Says:

The Salvation Army lads and lasses were beneficially in evidence during the week. Their grand and clear singing, accompanied by their popular and excellent band music, lent such charm to their religious exhortations as enraptured them with crowds of evidently interested hearers. The rough-and-ready cowboy, as well as his more sedate employer, seemed impressed with respect for all those efforts for better thoughts and reforms. The Army, during its life here, has been a power for good, and the fine new barracks they are about to erect shows what a hold they have among the people. We are glad to say that they are here to stay.

Two Convicts on the Train.

On our return journey we found two convicts in the forward car, whom the guards were taking to the Kingston Penitentiary. One was under a life-sentence for murder, the other under fourteen years' penalty for burglary. The Commissioner spoke to both of these convicts about the power of Christ to liberate their sin-enslaved souls, while the Red Knights sang several appropriate songs and choruses. One of the prisoners requested us to sing, "Where is my wandering boy to-night?" Brigadier Fugaire closed in prayer, and we left them with a hand-shake and a "God bless you," to take one bright and lasting memory into their cell, which we trust will help to bring their thoughts and emotions to bear upon the all-important subject of their eternal salvation.

Favorite Songs.

The general favorites among the sons of the Red Knights were, "Way over yonder on the hill-top," as sung in the charming style of the Male Quartet, "I want to go there," and "How can I live without Jesus?" sung by Capt. Russell, "Think, O Jesus, for what reason," and "God is calling the prodigal," sung by the entire Red Knights. Then the various instrumental numbers, as violin solos, concertina and cornet solos, cello solos, violin and cello duets, and orchestral numbers always were received well. Especially appreciated was the Commissioner's harp playing, which never failed to win admiration and applause.

The Young Violinist.

Among the most ardent admirers of the Commissioner's harp was a little girl at Skagway, who, on account of illness had been unable to come to any of the meetings, but who, on the Commissioner's invitation, was brought to the officers' quarters. There the Commissioner played for her; then the little girl brought out her violin and both astonished and amused us with the dexterity of her movements, the precision of her playing, and the grave way with which she played, having the airs of a much older person. God bless the child, the only one her mother has left out of four, and help her to grow up to be a blessing to her parents, and the world in general.

Many Adventures.

The Red Knights, during their separate tour of four weeks, had many adventures. At Fernie they arrived late, and went straight to the meeting. A compassionate lady left the meeting and bought a bag of oranges, which she handed to the platform. While the announcements were made the Red Knights hastily ate a few oranges behind the scenes, and, much refreshed, continued the meeting. At Kootenay Landing a landslide had delayed them and five miles were made on an open track, with a dangerously swerving motion. At Moosomin the station agent misinformed the Red Knights about the train time, with the result that they spent the 24th of May on a freight train instead of at Brandon. At Rossland they visited a gold mine. Another regrettable misunderstanding occurred on account of the town stand being out, unknown to the Red Knights, who, however, ceased playing as they marched past, and instead of holding the open air at the old stand, which was almost opposite the town band's stand, they went a block further away. Instead of appreciating the endeavor of the Red Knights, as most of Rossland's people did, one paper misrepresented the affair, saying that the Red Knights played while passing the band, etc. We are sorry that this error occurred, but the people know us better.

Toronto—All Change!

When, on the 5th of June, the well-known Union Station, Toronto, hove in sight, there was a quick scramble and jumping onto the platform to grasp once more the hands of old comrades and dear ones, and soon the tale of the tour was rehearsed in the different homes, to be treasured as a precious memory by all the Red Knights.

A VISION OF LOVE.

I saw it in the midst of the multitude. The face was calm and strong in its expression, and bore tokens of great suffering. It was a strangely mournful face, but yet was passing fair, for on the features played a holy light. There was peace in the depths of those eyes, peace with tender compassion on the care-worn, tear-stained, sun-darkened faces of the passing throng.

All who caught sight of that singularly pure and lovely countenance seemed drawn towards it as with magnetic power. The distress, the sorrowing, the sinful approached the Gracious Being and besought His aid. Did they seek in vain? Ah, no! His healing touch and tender words bound up each broken heart, and as His blessing fell upon the needy, His brow shone with a clearer, holier light, and as it became more brightly illuminated, I saw a name written there. Around the name, in dazzling characters, flashed out the words, "Eternal and Unchangeable," and the name was LOVE—Elsie M. Graham.

The thorn was the curse of Adam, but the crown of Christ.

Many of our troubles are instantly cured by holding them up in the light of God's countenance. They arise from seeing things in a false light, or from seeing things in the half-light of this world. When they are surveyed in the great sphere, and in the light of heaven, they dissolve like snowflakes.

Daily Readings.

"As wax melteth before the fire, so let the wicked perish at the presence of God."—Ps. lxxviii. 2. A Roman Emperor, who persecuted Christianity, and endeavored to stamp it out of existence, was at length killed in battle. Just before dying he is reported to have said, "O Gallienus, (meaning Jesus) Thou hast conquered!"

"Seek ye first the Kingdom of God, and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."—Matt. vi. 33. "It is of no use for you to pray with me now," said a dying man to two officers as they knelt by his side. "Once I had an opportunity to give myself to God, but I had set my heart on making money, and although many of my companions got saved, I let the opportunity slip by, and hardening my heart against God, I emigrated to the colonies, where I made my fortune. I have only been back home a few months, thinking to enjoy my money, and now I'm dying. Oh, that I had put God first! I feel it is too late now. I cannot pray. Money has been my god, and now I'm a lost soul." Thus he died.

"Man also knoweth not his time."—Eccles. ix. 12. "I have time to launch," said a sailor dressed girl, when an officer urged her to convert that night. She was very much convinced, but would not yield. When the officer said to her, "Death may come suddenly—do not put it off," she replied, "Oh, I have plenty of time to laugh." On the following Sunday morning, instead of returning to the meeting, as she had been urged to do, she went out boating with some friends. The mother wondered why her beloved daughter was so long returning. She went to the door; a crowd was coming up the street; men were carrying something on a door. With a shriek of woe she recognized the lifeless body of her daughter. Drowned suddenly!

"For now thou numberest my steps," but whom dost thou watch?—Job xiv. 16. Two children were playing on the hearth-rug before the fire. A plate of sweet cakes was brought in and laid upon the table. "Oh, I want one of those cakes!" cried the little boy, jumping up as soon as his mother went out, and going on tip-toe towards the table. "No, no," said his sister, pulling him back; "no, no, you must not touch."

"Mother won't know it; she didn't count them," he answered, shaking her off, and stretching forth his hand. "If she didn't, perhaps God counted," replied his sister.

The little boy's hand was stayed, and he went back to his seat, leaving the tempting cakes untouched.

"The fear of man bringeth a snare," but whose snare?—Prov. ix. 12. "I will shoot them if they pass tonight," said a fierce Swiss persecutor, alluding to our officers. Two hours before he was to put his project into execution both his legs were cut off by a train, and with murder in his heart he was suddenly swept before the bar of the great universal Judge.

He that touches God's children, touches the very apple of His eye. We may be sure that, except for some wise purpose, we are safe from harm, and if we are to suffer, it will only be that we may bring God the greater glory by our ultimate deliverance. If Daniel had not been cast into the den of lions, where would have been the glorious story of his faith and victory and God's power to keep?

"God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ."—Gal. vi. 14. In the American civil war a wounded soldier said: "Turn me over, will you, boy, so I can see the colors!" and when they turned him over he was dead.

Are your eyes fixed on Calvary's flag—on the cross? Are you fighting under it? Do you love it? If so, though a bullet should pierce your heart the next moment, oh, how gladly will you spill your life's blood for Him who died for you. Ah, it is when you get your eyes off the cross that your spirit grows weary, and you feel like giving in.

"Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."—John xv. 13. A sad steamboat accident happened, which resulted in the death of more than forty people. Amongst the passengers on the boat was a soldier of one of our corps. As soon as the accident occurred he set himself about to save others who were struggling in the water. He succeeded in saving some eight or nine, when his strength gave way. He was urged to save himself, but replied, "There is no danger for me. I am saved," and in a few moments later sank.

"Of another we read: 'Two years ago I was lying in a bar-room; I heard the drum, followed to the drill shed, and got saved. I have had my head cut, eyes blacked, and face bruised in the service of the devil. But my home, which was once a hell on earth, is now a little heaven. Instead of teaching the children to curse and swear, I teach them to say, 'Our Father, which art in heaven.'"

Another man, though in a good position and well-dressed, was actually staggering through the streets when a little Army open-air service attracted him, and he was led the same evening to the Saviour. From that day that man has been a thoroughgoing Salvation soldier, wearing the despised red jersey, marching in the ranks, and everywhere toiling like the poorest of the poor.

Then a poor girl, for years on the streets notorious for her drunkenness which had again and again landed her in prison, became an honest servant-girl, and an upright soldier and speaker as well. Will may an Army officer at this date write:

Honest Criticism.

"One often hears of honest criticism, and wonders what the expression may mean as applied to a work like this. Surely any critic who was thoroughly honest must be disarmed in the presence of even an earnest effort to accomplish such results as these. But here are, in the course of four years, no fewer than one hundred and seventy corps and eighty outposts established, in every one of which successful attempts to bring about such wonders are being made all the year round, under the superintendence of five hundred and twenty persons, whose lives are given up to the work, and who have absolutely nothing to gain but just these results by continuing in it. Never has the Army been more honestly judged, or more outspokenly described, than in the Roman Catholic city of Montreal, where a Catholic paper, in commenting on a desperate attack made upon our soldiers, said: 'They have made the name of God ring in ears that never heard of us before. They have carried the spirit of faith to the very threshold of those who would not put themselves out of the way to look for it. They have consoled the suffering, reformed the culprit, converted some which had not been for them, would never have known that there was such a thing as a future for which one ought to prepare.'"

Fear and doubt give God the lie. The Christian who fears to be spent for Christ is a candle unwilling to be lighted.

WANTED, HELP!

"Ask them to help me." These words were spoken by a young man of twenty-one years of age, who had spent his life for selfish interests, and rejected Christ.

Only six days before, we were called in to see him. We found him able to walk about the floor, but dying with rapid consumption. When asked by the Esau whether he was converted, he replied, "No." We urged him to give himself to God, and kneeling together—a little group of Salvationists—we earnestly prayed for him, while he in true repentance and humility gave himself to God. He arose from his knees with the assurance that God, for Christ's sake, had forgiven him. We visited him daily after this, and found him sinking very fast.

One Saturday afternoon we were sitting in his room, and he whispered to his brother, on whose arm his head was resting, "Ask them to help me." "Thank God, we were in a position to ask the Friend that seeketh closer than a brother, to pilot him safely over the river, and two hours later he passed away to be with Jesus."

I have been thinking a great deal about the word "Help," since that young man asked for it, and have prayed again and again that God would make me a help to someone. I feel if there is one thing the world needs at the present time it is help, and how few there are who are willing to give their lives to rescue poor down-trodden souls from a life of misery and a never-ending hell.

If a man is drowning in a harbor, does he want someone to stand on the wharf and teach him how to swim? No, he wants help.

Men and women are sinking under the waves of sin all round us, and going down to rise no more. They need not our advice, but our help.

Oh, for men and women consecrated to the will of God, and filled with the Holy Ghost, who will help to save the world!

"Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this: to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep themselves unstained from the world."—T. McWilliams, Capt.

THANKS.

Capt. Cox, of Sherbrooke, wishes to express his thanks for all the kind letters of sympathy and friendship which he has received from many Staff and Field Officers throughout the Territory on the occasion of his recent bereavement in the promotion of his dear wife.

THE twilight of an evening was getting shadowy as I sat in Clapton Square. I was a member of Mrs. Staff, and my mission was to visit the Whitechapel Shelter for the poor and needy for spiritual blessing. Salvation Army and I, I may imagine, were on board a tram, we passed down Mare Street, to the spot far from the place of the Army. I was alone, and I was in view, and a man, a brave man, with a few followers, his head lifting his voice, a foundation for a groan, has spread around before me, I could of the class composed a few minutes later, Street, Whitechapel Shelter, waiting for was some little while some of the women turn to be admitted putting as to the men they had earned that they should do with. Seeing two officers, this little group, and in a few minutes filled with an eagerness, and we could detect on improving.

A Character! And such a crowd of faces, scarred, disfigured, ragged and young, little and poverty-stricken, looking each other and eager to be difficult to imagine fair, well-fed, well-to-do. It was just such a vision and need as faced thirty years ago, and the words of hope and salvation for our Saviour.

Inside the Shelter, pitiable wreckage of misfortune not more obliterated from the officer who conducted the absence of Beryl is in charge, careful was across there were three hundred work place was crowded men, besides a number whose only home was the Army's roof. The halfpence for their morning went on sufficient for the day. As I passed through I noticed that the shelter was not merely a sermon in words. The Adjutant had the usual evening entered, and before we visited a large table with plain between two and three poorest and most womanhood—hard and bearded eyes—were of all ages, on death's precipitous grades of social browns being furrowed of years of sinning. ### Marriage—

ENSIGN CHARLES J. STAIGER, who came out from Harrison, Ontario, on June 6th, 1899, and is now on Special Work in the North-West Province, to Lieut. Margaret S. Owen, who came out from Nelson, B.C., on August 3rd, 1900, and was last stationed at Butte, Mont., on Tuesday, June 10th, 1902, at Winnipeg, by Brigadier Southall.

EVANGELINE C. BOOTH, Commissioner.

No Peace, Nor Truce.

When we contemplate the great slaughter of homes, happiness, wives, children, honor, virtue, and manhood which the drink fiend makes daily in our fair country, then we can only cry out more determinedly that there shall be no peace nor truce made with the accursed traffic until it is completely annihilated. To those people who shut their eyes to the wrecked homes, and filled jails and insane asylums, or those who know nothing about it because they do not trouble themselves in their complacency, about the misery and wretchedness of others, we would, at any rate, point out the statistics reprinted on page two of this issue. Nearly thirty-three million dollars spent for liquor in one year in the Dominion! That is about $6.50 for every man, woman, and child. It is about one-third more than paid out for meat, or for bread, or for woollen goods, or for lumber to build houses. It is twice as much as paid out for boots and shoes; four times as much as for the education of the youth; five times and a-half as much as contributed towards Christian missions.

The amount spent in drink in one year would build a complete new city for a population of fifty thousand people, allowing each family of five a home worth $2,000 and $300 for furnishing the same, and leaving nearly ten million dollars for schools, religious edifices, public buildings, and other public works. Think of it, a whole city swallowed up in drink every year!

To say these figures are appalling is altogether too inadequate a term. They are staggering. They make one understand why those who are interested financially in the traffic put up such a big fight against Prohibition: It would mean the loss of millions to a comparatively small number. In the production of liquor a much smaller number of men are employed than in manufacturing any other article for consumption or use. If the traffic was stopped all the employees would find other employment, as well as a number of those who are now idle through it, who, in addition, would be turned into consumers as well as producers. Our business is, therefore, to go on with our relentless warfare against drink, welcoming every means of restriction, but not giving in until it shall be banished from the face of the earth. Let us also remember that we do not fight men, but principles, bad conditions, and evil tendencies; in short, sin. Our business is to love and save sinful men, but to hate and destroy everything that makes men sinful.

Territorial Newslets.

We extend our hearty congratulations to Adj. McMillan, Chancellor of the Newfoundland Province, and Adj. David Creighton, Chancellor of the East Ontario Province, on their promotion to the rank of Staff-Captain. Both are old and tried officers of extensive experience, and will receive the best wishes of Salvationists throughout the Territory.

Adj. Barr, in charge of the work in the Yukon, is under farewell orders, and it is expected he will leave Dawson in July. His successor is now occupying the Commissioner's attention.

The health of Lieut. Colonel Mrs. Read, we regret to say, is still critical, and absolute quiet and rest are necessary. We mention this for the information of kind inquirers respecting the health of Mrs. Read, who is unable to reply to the many letters received by her on this subject.

Ensign Jamieson, of the Chief Secretary's Department, we are sorry to say, has been very ill these last few days, and needs our prayers. For the next two or three weeks the Ensign will take a much-needed rest.

There will be a great commissioning of twenty Cadets, by the Commissioner, in the Temple, on Monday, June 30th.

When the Commissioner was at Skagway she promoted Serg. Benson, a native, a bright and intelligent man who is in charge of the outpost at Shakane a new settlement, where live seventy Indians who are all Salvationists, to the rank of Serg. Major. Bro. Benson was made into a Sergeant at the same time to assist in the work.

A lease has been signed to secure a new building in Spokane for our Social Work, which will be carried on more extensively than heretofore. In fact, one would think the building had been erected for our use, so well adapted is it for Army purposes. The building is much larger than the one the S.A. has previously occupied, and more suitably located.

Adj. and Mrs. Wakefield, of Winnipeg, are not enjoying satisfactory health, and need our prayers.

Major McMillan is making extensive arrangements for Camp Meetings on a large scale at Woodstock, Ont.

The County Council of York has sent along its annual cheque of $50 to the Prison-Gate Work, for which we are grateful.

The general sales of the Trade Department are extremely gratifying of late. The Tailoring Department is also exceptionally busy, doubtless many taking advantage of the low prices at present prevailing. No less than twenty-five suits were ordered during the past week.

Staff-Capt. Cass took the city officers for a day's outing last week, to the island, and a happy time was spent.

Mrs. Capt. Lacey has just undergone a serious operation in the St. Luke's Hospital, Spokane, but we are pleased to state she is making good progress in the right direction.

As previously stated, Treas. McMillan, of Fernie, had one of his boys killed in the explosion there. Another boy who worked on the same shift stayed home, as he was not feeling well, while the Treasurer himself only escaped by having to go away on business. The man who took his place was killed. We pray that God may comfort the bereaved parents.

WHAT IS GOOD?

"What is the real good?" I ask in musing mood.
"Order," said the law court;
"Knowledge," said the school;
"Truth," said the wise man;
"Pleasure," said the fool;
"Love," said the maiden;
"Beauty," said the page;
"Freedom," said the dreamer;
"Home," said the sage;
"Faith," said the soldier;
"Equality," said the seer.
Spoke my heart full sadly—
"The answer is not here."
Then within my bosom
Softly I heard—
"Each heart holds the secret; Kindness is the word."
—John Boyle O'Reilly.

The Long-Looked-For Peace.

A MESSAGE FROM THE GENERAL.

COMRADES and Friends of the British Field,—I congratulate you. Your prayers and yearnings have been answered. Peace has been declared, and the long and weary South African conflict is at an end. The strife has been specially distressing to us Salvationists. Earthly war, from any cause, or in any place, cannot be otherwise than painful to our feelings, but in this instance many things have united to make it peculiarly deplorable. We are the friends of the Boers and Britishers alike. We have had comrades fighting on both sides. Our soul-saving efforts in large parts of the country have been all but suspended, many of our halls closed, our officers exiled or commanded, our soldiers scattered, our income damaged—in short, everything has been reduced to confusion, if not despair.

The advent of the angel of peace has, through mercy, cheered all this. Now, my African comrades, here is your opportunity. Go to work with all your might to make the most of it. Restore the waste places, furbish up the barracks, open the doors, with the flag, bring out the drum, send the glad tidings of mercy throughout the land, welcome the wanderers back to their post, and with new courage and determination recommence the grand conflict with sin, and vice, and misery, and hell.

This task will be a heavy one, and fresh reinforcements will be needed. The Army throughout the world should join hands in furnishing these supplies.

Men and women will be our great need.

WHO WILL VOLUNTEER?

Money will be an almost equal necessity. Who will send it along? Let us praise God for the glad termination of the dreadful struggle, and continue our intercessions for the descent of the Holy Spirit, but at the same time let us be careful to improve the great and glorious chance placed in our hands of blessing the present and improving the future of that is, beyond question, intended to be, in the providence of God, one of the mighty nations of the earth. Yours in the bonds of Peace and Love toward all men,

WILLIAM BOOTH.

Red-Hot Revival at Lisgar St.

(Special.)

Brigadier Pugmire and Staff-Captain Manton have had an excellent start to their eighteen days' revival campaign at the Lisgar St. corps. The Revivalists are loud in their praises of the whole-hearted welcome which they have received from the officers, soldiers, and friends, which is second to none they have had anywhere. The band has been out to every service, while the soldiery have turned out almost en masse.

The spiritual results, up to the present, count a round dozen—nine for pardon and three for purity. The penitential form scenes on Sunday night were most touching. Here is a mother (a soldier) rejoicing over the salvation of her daughter, who has never been converted before, and said convert promises to be a soldier, and if she makes as good a one as her mother she will do. There is Brother Verrall, dancing happily over the return to the fold of his wife and brother, and so on. "It's the old-time religion," the Revivalists and the Lisgar St. brass mean business, and we predict sweeping victories during the next few days.

The announcement that the Commissioner, the Red Knights of the Cross, and the Training Home Principals and Cadets would visit the corps on Sunday, June 29th, brought down the house. God bless the Commissioner.

Training Home Tips.

Brigadier Friedrich delivered a very interesting lecture on "Army Literature." To illustrate his talk, the editor had several foreign War Cries, magazines, and other literature, which he said the Cadets might read at their leisure. They were quite amused, but they have been endeavoring to pronounce the names of the foreign papers.

The subject was dealt with from the handling of the article to the Editor to the time when it was read by the many thousands of people in the homes, at the shops, and on the streets.

The T. H. Staff and Cadets were pleased to accept the invitation to return to Lippincott for another Sunday's meetings, and notwithstanding the intensely warm weather, good crowds were present at all the services, and gave liberally to the offerings.

Especially at the afternoon meeting at the University grounds did a fine crowd gather. The largest collection for years was given at the grove, the Treasurer tells us.

At night we had a very special time, with souls in the fountain. The kind friends and officers deserve thanks for the many "nice things" arranged for lunch and tea.

Several good cases of conversion have taken place of late at the operations held by the Cadets on the street. Some are becoming soldiers at the city corps. We believe in salvation being found at the drum-head still.

The second visit to the Temple is being eagerly looked forward to by the Cadets. If we may judge by the results of the Easter meetings held there, a good time can be predicted.

The session is nearing a close, and on Monday, June 30th, at the Temple, a large commissioning service will be conducted by the Commissioner, when we shall say good-bye to the dear Training Home and leave for the field.

Four hundred and fifty-four homes visited, and one hundred and twenty prayed in, is a recent afternoon's work by the War Cries and fifty young Soldiers were also disposed of in two afternoons.

THE COLONEL IN THE EAST.

(By wire.)

The Eastern Province extended to Colonel and Mrs. Jacobs, our worthy Chief Secretary, a most hearty and enthusiastic welcome. The meetings at Fredericton were all that could be desired. The subjects were well chosen, the truths were none, resulting in twelve souls for the Master. St. John surpassed highest expectations, eight souls in the fountain. So much are they loved by the Easterners that the Provincial Officer had to tear them away from the soldiers in order to catch the train for North Sydney. ## Sad Experiences OF A BACKSLIDER.

Led on by the Devil Step by Step—Reclaimed in the Central Prison, and is now Doing Well.

Central Prison.

Dear Old War Cry,
I thought a letter from me would be acceptable to the Cry, and might be the means, in the hands of the Master, of bringing souls to Christ. I know of nothing that may, in His hands, be of more use than a brief resume of my own life. I was born in Central New York, in 1848. My father was one of God's saints, who gave me an education with the hope and prayer that if it was God's will I should follow in His footsteps and become a minister of the Gospel which he had preached for fifty years.

I had a sweet, precious, praying mother, who, from my earliest remembrance, instilled into my mind the love of Jesus. In the latter part of 1861, I enlisted and went out as a drummer boy in the Union Army. Being a little fellow, and only a boy, I soon became the pet of the regiment, and the boys in blue thought it great fun to crack me to drink liquor, and would laugh at the queer faces I would make in drinking it. As a result after three years and six months' service, after the surrender at Appomattox, I came back to my dear Christian parents and sisters with an appetite for strong drink, which has been the curse of my life.

Soon after I married a lovely Christian girl, and God blessed our home with four little ones. I obtained a position as City Reporter on the N. Y. Sun, and was afterwards appointed Traveling Correspondent of the N. Y. Sun, Philadelphia Record, and St. Louis Globe-Democrat, and we were very happy in our little home; but the husband and father had not taken God into his life, and I think has had to pass through such a furnace of affliction as few mortals are ever called upon to endure before he could yield to the voice of Jesus. I drank moderately at first—one of your cantake-it-or-let-it-alone fellows. God laid His hand upon my home, and took, in death, my little boy, and then my little girl, and then I went from bad to worse. I wouldn't hear the entreaties of my dear ones, wouldn't listen to the voice of God, and went on in the course of a drunkard.

Over a Mother's Tears.

Over a father's prayers, over a wife's breaking heart, and, worst of all, trampling the precious blood of Jesus under my unpolished feet. I then lost my position through my own conduct, and while on a protracted spree in the city of San Francisco, received a telegram that father was dying. I went home and promised dear old father that I would be good and meet him in heaven. Then and there I gave my heart to Jesus, and soon after gave my little all to Him in complete consecration.

On looking about for the most useful field, I selected the Salvation Army, offered my services, and was advanced to a high position in that blessed service. I spent out of an otherwise miserable life winning souls for Jesus. Oh, how sweetly and lovingly He kept me! Then, instead of clinging to the cross and trusting Jesus, I watched men and trusted too much to them. As a result I lost my religion, and from that time have been getting worse and worse, until the devil had almost convinced me there was no salvation for me. I tried everything—gold cure, pledges, temperance societies, and so forth—with no effect, until at last I landed here in this institution. Here I met Salvationists and other Christians, who took a special interest in me. God bless the Army officers, and when they get to glory, and their crowns are given to them, away down in one corner, almost out of sight, if they see a little weaver, they'll know it is me.

Three Happy Years

Like the prodigal of old, I came back to Father's house, and, bless His name, He took me in.

A few days more and I shall be a free man, not only free from prison bars, but free in Christ Jesus. God bless you, Editor. Pray for me. I am going all the way through and will not stop this side of heaven. F. L. C., Central Prison.

Had No Trousers.

A Man Went to Bed at Joe Beef's, and Had to Stay There.

A man called at "Joe Beef's," the Salvation Army boarding-house on the wharf, the other evening, and asked for a room and bed. He was accommodated. Next morning he was called at the time when everybody is required to get up, but he responded by saying that he had no trousers, and could not get up until he was provided with a pair. When it was remarked that he was fully clothed when he entered the establishment, and he was asked for an explanation, he stated that the pair of overalls he wore when he arrived at the place belonged to another man, who also lodged there. His friend had need of them at a certain time, and had called and taken them away, leaving him with none.

Ensign Parsons then commenced a search for a pair of the necessary articles, and with some difficulty got him a fit. The Ensign states that he has had an unusually heavy demand for men's garments this spring, and his "lending wardrobe" is now empty. He would be glad if any charitably disposed persons, having old garments to spare, would let him know, and he would get them and make use of them. Address Ensign Parsons, "Joe Beef's" Shelter, 13 Common Street, Montreal. Telephone Main 1444.

EASTERN HARVESTERS.

I was told you about the big times at Campbellton. We got up early and left this place on that fast train across the people's farms, come right past the fields I used to plough and harrow. We had some fun about the man we thought we lost on the railroad. We seen a lot of Salvationists at Newcastle when we was come through. Miss Lebrana and Miss Holden, the officers, was there at the station. Mrs. McEheneey joined us here, and she was full of joy over the good times they had at Newcastle while we was at Campbellton. She told about the brass band, what got saved just two or three nights before, held out on the Army march. We got along fine, and when the conductor said, "Moncton, change cars," we seen Capt. Smith on the platform, smile all over. Staff-Capt. Howell, the musical man, from the Army head office at St. John was at Moncton that night, and what a time we had! Adj. Byers was very kind, and kept us over night, then we started the next mornen for Hillsboro. By-and-by the conductor said, "Salisbury Junction!" and there was another train waiten to take us to Hillsboro. Here we had to say goodbye to Mrs. McEheneey for a while, as she had to go through to St. John. We will miss her very much. She is about the best I ever seen for worken for souls and cheeren people up. We all pray that she may be a great blessing while at St. John.

Hillsboro is a pretty little town. Capt. Morthought, who is in charge of the Army work in this place, met us at the station, and we started off for the Army quarters. It is a long walk, but there is a starwath all the way, and it's wide enough for a big man with a valise in each hand to walk on. Lieut. Fraser had a good dinner prepared for us, and we soon felt quite at home.

The Devil Knocken Round There.

They told us the devil was still knocken round Hillsboro, so we started in for war right off. God was with us, and we had some wonderful times. The music and singing took me in the open-air, and night after night the barracks was packed out. On Monday night Brigadier Sharp and Capt. Fleming was with us. They had a long drive from Moncton on a wagon, and arrived at the barracks shortly after the meeten begun, and the crowd stood up clappen their hands as they came in. The singing of Capt. Fleming took line, and the powerful talk from the Brigadier went to every heart. Hillsboro shall long feel the effects of their visit. Then we went right on telling the truth and worken for souls, and God rewarded us in our work. Saturday night and Sunday Capt. Fleming was with us again and we were crowded out at the barracks, and had to take to the Town Hall, payen four dollars a night for it. It was block full on Saturday night. Sunday was a great day. We fought it out with Old Squarefoot, and got the victory.

On our last Monday night here, Adj. Byers, Capt. Smith, and about twenty-five of the Moncton comrades, arrived at Hillsboro in five teams. What a stir they made! Some of the people thought the whole Army was let loose, and in spite of the heavy rain and red-coats goen round on horses, we had a grand time in the open-air, and a pretty lively time inside. The Adj. spoke very highly of the troupe's work since come into his District.

The Musical Blizzard.

Next came our wind-up and musical blizzard on Tuesday night. We were full up, and had a great time. We rattled off the music for about an hour, then the Ensign spoke very powerfully on the Army's teachings, especially baptism. A good many eyes were opened that night, and we believe they shall not soon forget the meeting. God was with us, and four young men knelt at the cross and found Christ.

Some of the results of the meetings are: eight souls saved, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-five infor attendance, one hundred and seven open-air attendance, and about six times the average income. The soldiers, though few, rallied to our help, and God blessed them, and the officers did all in their power to make our stay comfortable and a success. They are doin well at Hillsboro, and we believe God is goin to bless their efforts. We thank the officers, soldiers, and friends of Parrsboro for all their kindness to us.—Farmer Tom.

Self-Denial in Halifax District.

At Halifax I, the S.-D. Target was $450. Our plans were laid, the Adj. put out the bridges, and started all the comrades at work, and what a rejoicing there was when it was announced, two Sundays after, that the target was reached with ten dollars to spare!

The target for Halifax II. was $140. Capt. and Mrs. James, recently arrived from the Sea-Grill Isle, are the officers in charge. This is the Captain's first special financial effort, but with the help of the local people he did not come short.

Capt. McEheneey and Lieut. McKim are in charge of Halifax IV. This is a new opening, but they are believers in Self-Denial, and helped their officers reach the target of $50.

Ensign and Mrs. Carver are the presiding elders at Dartmouth. We were delighted to hear from them that their target of $115 was reached.

We next took a trip on the D. A. R. to Windsor, and were met by Ensign Larder. The Ensign and Capt. Long are determined to reach their target of $125.

We pass on up the valley and stop at the seat of war, Kentville. Here we found Capt. Wyatt and her bravos. Their target of $75 is an accomplished fact, and they have had enough experience to fill a book. What with getting into a wazy smashup, being driven from a train, and in a village, astray in a graveyard, it is a wonder that they are left to tell the tale.

A few miles up the country and we arrive at Canning, and behold, even here they have smashed their target of $75, and Capt. Chaudier declares that she could have doubled it, only there was a six-dollar debt facing her, and she wanted to clear it off.

After a short journey through the beautiful Annapolis Valley, we reached Middleton where we changed cars for Lunenburg, and arrived there at 6.25 p.m. to find Capt. Tatem and Lieut. Hagen rejoicing that their $35 target was safe, and they were able to hoist the flag to the top of the mast.

Coming back over the line about fifteen miles, the beautiful town of Bridgewater was reached. We inquired of Lieut. Vending, the officer in charge, how Self-Denial was going, and she declared their victory was sure. This little band have some got about them.

We took the stage-coach here, and crossed the country to Liverpool, where Captain Morthought, and Lieut. Clark are stationed. They told us their target of $45 was a heavy one, being $15 more than last year, but they went over that.

From here we returned home, made up our books, and found our District target of $1,140 was an accomplished fact.—G. H. Dowell, D.O.

Promoted to Glory.

SHE HAD NO FEAR.

Bay Roberts.—Again it falls to our lot to report the death of one of our comrades. This time our much-loved J. S. Sergt-Major, who has been from us. Mrs. Hayne has, for several years, endeavored to do her best to lead the children into the path of right, and her words of advice will ever live in the hearts of many of them. On Friday last we laid her to rest. Many soldiers and friends turned out to pay their last tribute of respect to one beloved comrade. She leaves a husband and seven children to mourn their loss. The eldest is an accepted Candidate, and the second is a Corps Cadet, the youngest child being only eight months old. For about seven months our sister has been confined to her home, and until the last she hoped her life might be spared for her children's sake. When visiting her, we always found her with full confidence in God, and she was never heard to express a fear of dying. Just before passing away she asked Mrs. Hiscock to sing the hymn, "Jesus, Jesus, Jesus only," and she joined in the precious words.

At the memorial service. Many of the comrades spoke of the blessings received through the life of our sister, and many of the unsaved were moved to tears. May God comfort the bereaved.—E. H.

DEATH HAD NO STING.

North Head, N.B.—"O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"—1 Cor. xv. 55.

We were once more brought face to face with the realities of death when a telegram was received from Parrsboro of our beloved comrade, Rachel Dorell, had gone to heaven. Rachel had been conversant for about two years, and was not afraid to die. When asked by the doctor and those around her if she feared death, she smiled and said, "Why no; I am going to heaven." Death had no sting, the grave had no terror for her.

Her remains were brought home, and we laid her to rest on June 6th, with all Army honors. Her sister Mrs. Thomas, Secretary of this corps, said to me, on hearing of her dear sister's death, "Oh, Captain, it will make heaven all the sweeter to us now, to know that we have someone there waiting for us."

Someone to call us from earth away, Someone beckoning, come! Someone to hear the Master say, "Enter, thou hast well done!"

Someone to bloom in the Land of Love, Around the Saviour's throne: A darling's hand stretched out from above

To give us a welcome home. Capt. L. Richards

Determined to Win.

Neison.—Ensign Scott, Capt. Chaffin, and Treas. Mrs. Brown have gone to surrounding villages to collect for Self-Denial. The two latter brought home $25 from Cranbrook after all expenses were paid. Ensign Scott went to the Lardo district, and expects to be away one week. Mrs. Frost is left in charge of the work here, and, like a good soldier, is always ready to do anything for the advancement of God's Kingdom. She will soon be leaving us for Spokane, and we shall miss her much. May God bless her. White Wings.

Five Bought Pardon.

Arnold's Cove.—God is still His work in this part of the v. Since last report five souls have been pardoned through the blood. Wednesday night two were under the flag. We are very close the Lieutenant, who is farwell. She has been a great blessing to us, and we pray that she may wherever she goes S. M. Green.

Hoist the Flag to the T.

Blenheim.—Lieut. Murray, said of his ward workers, was to hoist the Self-Denial flag to the top of the mast. The Lieutenant, comrades did nobly from the to the lowest collector. This was the champion collector, in the sum of $21. Two done twenty-five cents each were collected for War Cry. We had meetings on Sunday.—Ina G.

Special Program.

Brooklin.—A special program given on Monday to a good people. Adj. Savage filled the well. "D. O." Grant was also ice cream was served at the ch. are determined to go forth Marshall.

Blessings Through Self-D.

Burk's Falls.—We were success raising our Self-Denial target, ing $25 over. The comrades, hard and faithfully, and can a to blessings received in collection. The first time for Self-Denial, bless them. Quite recently the blessing of a clean heart, beautiful sight. Yesterday was good day, commencing with a knee-drill, and one brother fell down. At night the hall was full. We wound up with three precious in the fountain. May God keep true.—E. M.

Return of the Troupe.

Campbellton.—God is blessing wonderfully. We have had a visit of the Soul-Saving Troupe. Byers was also present. They were packed, and I wish you could hear the people cheer when I called a number of comrades to the front to be enrolled as soldiers. Tom almost went wif joy. We had a commission Sergeants by Adj. Byers, with three souls for salvation. Sunday we had a good day, 3 souls for salvation. Sergt. Berry.

Celebrating the Peace.

Charlottetown.—S.D. target was marked. It was a hard but we got there. Mrs. Adj. collected over $80. This was the victories of peace. We also in celebrating the peace in St. John's, by spreading our good tidings. Capt. Anderson, ing a well-learned rest. She Sunday night meeting, speaking great power. Capt. Cairns, of war, is here. We have had three last report, one a Scot for whom Mrs. Creighton sang, help but lo'e Him." The Adj. just returned from a week-end mission. Secretary Ellis has twice at Windsor, lately engagements will likely be summer-laps.—H.

Seven at the Cross.

Dresden.—We had a grand victory. Two came to the Thursday night, and on Sunday five more knelt at the mercy-decided to take her stand as a soldier. Dresden corps is right up, and we are belling more victories.—J. Sharpe.

Five Sought Pardon.

Arnold's Cove.—God is still reviving His work in this part of the vineyard. Since last report five souls have sought pardon through the blood, and on Wednesday night two were enrolled under the flag. We are very sorry to lose the Lieutenant who is about to farewell. She has been a great blessing to us, and we pray that God will bless her wherever she goes.—C. W. S. M. Green.

Hoist the Flag to the Top.

Blenheim.—Lieut. Murray, with the aid of his ward workers, was enabled to hoist the Self-Denial flag to the top of the mast. The Lieutenant and his comrades did nobly, from the highest to the lowest collector. The writer was the champion collector, bringing in the sum of $21. Two donations of twenty-five cents each were also received for War Cry. We had good meetings on Sunday.—Ina Groom.

Special Program.

Brooklin.—A special program was given on Monday to a good crowd of people. Adj. Savage filled the chair well. "D. O." Brant was also present. Ice cream was served at the close. We are determined to go forward.—J. Mansfield.

Blessings Through Self-Denial.

Burk's Falls.—We were successful in raising our Self-Denial target, and going $25 over. The comrades worked hard and faithfully, and can all testify to blessings received in collecting for the first time for Self-Denial. May God bless them. Quite recently six sought the blessing of a clean heart. It was a beautiful sight. Yesterday we had a good day, commencing with a rousing knee-drill, and one brother for salvation. At night the hall was filled, and we wound up with three precious souls in the fountain. May God keep them true.—E. M.

Return of the Troupe.

Campbellton.—God is blessing us wonderfully. We have had a return visit of the Soul-Saving Troupe. Adj. Byers was also present. The building was packed, and I wish you could have heard the people cheer when the Adjutant called a number of comrades to the front to be enrolled as Salvation soldiers. Tom almost went wild with joy. We had a commissioning of Sergeants by Adj. Byers, winding up with three souls for salvation. On Sunday we had a good day, with four souls for salvation.—Sgt. F. E. Berry.

Celebrating the Peace.

Charlottetown.—S.D. target again badly marked. It was a hard fight, but we got there. Mrs. Adj. Crichton collected over $80. This was one of the victories of peace. We also joined in celebrating the peace in South Africa, by spreading our good flag to the breeze. Capt. Anderson is enjoying a well-earned rest. She took the Sunday night meeting, speaking with great power. Capt. Cairns, of the U. S. war, is here. We have had three meetings here, and a Scotch sailor, for whom Mrs. Crichton sang, "I cannot help but love Him." The Adjutant has just returned from a week-end at Summerside. Secretary Ellis has assisted twice at Windsor lately. Our next engagements will likely be with the summer-imps.—H.

Seven at the Cross.

Dresden.—We had a grand week's victory. Two came to the Lord on Thursday night, and on Sunday night five more knelt at the mercy-seat. One decided to take her stand as a Salvation soldier. Dresden corps is coming right up, and we are believing for more victories.—J. Sharpe.

Another Victory.

Halifax I.—Another Self-Denial Week is over. With untiring effort, hard work, prayer, and faith, we succeeded in going over our target. Praise the Lord! Quite a number of souls have sought the Lord since last report. We are having good crowds, and our open-air meetings are grand.—Treas. Cashin.

Eight Soldiers Enrolled.

Halifax IV.—Since the opening of Richmond we are having the presence of the Master. On Sunday Capt. McEachern enrolled eight soldiers under the flag. The soldiers are fighting and are preparing for a big smash in Satan's ranks. He will have to give way before the power of the Holy Ghost. The attendance has been small this week, as a number of people are afraid of the small-pox, which is about here, but we will strive to do our best and put our trust in God.—Sister Mrs. Simmons.

Good Open-Air Meetings.

Hamilton II.—We are still on the warpath, and have been successful in landing a few at the Master's feet. Our Self-Denial effort was taken hold of well, with the result that we have raised our target, and managed to get a few dollars over to push the chariot along. Many souls can also record victories and blessings through this Week of Prayer and Self-Denial. God is with us and we believe He is going to help us in our summer's work. We have exceptional opportunities for our open-air work. The people crowd around and listen to the singing and speaking, and show that they appreciate all that is done for their benefit. Last Saturday evening we could not stand at our usual corner on account of sickness near by, so we took our stand at another corner, and had a beautiful time. Sunday was a day of victory, and the meetings were splendid. Some souls desired to be prayed for, and two men remarked that they could not stay away from the meetings and promised to come soon and get saved.—Frodo.

"I'll Meet."

Hant's Harbor.—Sunday was the farewell day of our comrades who are leaving for the summer. After working together for some months, it was hard to say good-bye. We had blessed meetings and three brothers sought and found salvation. The glory of God filled our hearts, and we pledged ourselves to be true to God and the flag.

till we meet on the other side.—Onlooker.

He Wore a Bonnet.

Houlton.—This town was visited by a tremendous fire, and a number of buildings were destroyed. The soldiers caught the fire of the Holy Ghost, and we are having the victory. Our Self-Denial target was reached in spite of the trying circumstances. With God all things are possible. Last night we had a visit from the Woodstock officers and soldiers, and, of course, had a splendid time. The old and new Army was exhibited, Capt. Kirk marching at the front with a bonnet on. The street was thronged. We had a good meeting inside, and everyone says, "Come again, Ensign, with your noble soldiers."—P. L.

A Splendid Victory.

Huntsville.—We have gained a glorious victory in our Self-Denial effort. Our target was $50 and we raised over $100. The victory is greater when we consider the amount of sickness in town. There was quite a competition between the sisters and brothers. Sergt. Major Mrs. Guage went $17 over her target and beat the brothers, and Mrs. Jones, our War Cry Boomer, scored the largest of all. Captain Rowell, with the band, raised over $30 serenading. The Juniors also did well. Several souls gave themselves to God, which was best of all.—S. McFarland, R.C.

Sin, and its Remedy.

Lewiston.—On Saturday we had a very special meeting, led by Staff-Capt. Taylor, his subject being, "Sin, and its Remedy." Sunday was a day long to be remembered. The meetings were conducted by Mrs. Taylor. Capt. Lacey has gone to Spokane to see his wife, who is very ill. Cadet Ebern, with his little band of blood-and-fire soldiers, is pushing forward in the cause of Christ.—S. M. Sumpter.

The Prodigal came Home.

Little Bay Island.—On Sunday night we had a blessed time. The power of God was felt and at the close we rejoiced over one prodigal returning to the fold. We had a hallelujah wind-up, and closed the meeting by singing, "I'll be true, Lord, to Thee."—Corps Cadet Emily Oxford.

Rejoicing Over Four Souls.

London.—We are pleased to report good meetings on Sunday. We held the first open-air of the season in Victoria Park, and had a good crowd.

At night the barracks was well filled, and as Adj. Goodwin spoke on "The Way of the Transgressor," the truth of her words were corroborated in the faces of many of those present, who had bitterly proved for themselves that "the way of the transgressor is hard." Deep conviction was felt, and we had the joy of seeing four penitent souls kneeling at the mercy-seat, one of them being a Junior. We had a hallelujah wind-up at the finish, Sergt. Major Andrews leading off with "The old-time religion is just the thing for me," followed by 2 soldiers, Slakins and Smith, who, although our oldest soldiers, are quite young when it comes to rejoicing in the Lord.—Amo Dies.

Well Done!

Missoula.—Another glorious financial victory. Our Self-Denial target was $140, and we realized over $200. All glory to God! Mrs. Ensign Cummins, I think, is champion, collecting personally over $120. This is our third financial effort in this town, and each one has been better than the preceding one. There is much practical sympathy towards our work here.—Ensign Cummins.

Three Captures Made.

Montreal II.—On Sunday we had a blessed time, and three souls were captured from Satan's ranks. Major Turner and Adj. Creighton were with us on Tuesday night. We had a solemn tea and a good meeting after when three sought the blessing of a clean heart. Capt. and Mrs. Crego are working hard, and we mean to stand by them and rally round the dear old flag.—R. H. B.

Waged a Good Warfare.

Musgravetown.—We are doing all we can to pull down the kingdom of His Satanic Lowness. On Sunday night Capt. Baggs made us farewell. She has waged a good warfare during the ten months she has been in command. We were all sorry to part with her, but our loss will be someone else's gain. May God bless and prosper her, is our heart-felt prayer.—Well Wisher.

Believing for a Revival.

Neepawa.—During the past week God has been blessing us. On Sunday we had good meetings, and God came very near. We are praying and believing for an out-pouring of His Spirit.—A Soldier.

Seventeen Souls Set Free.

Ottawa.—The Salvation Army is always to the front in seizing every opportunity for doing good. Such was the case on Victoria Day, when the Ottawa corps had a grand meeting and lemon pie social. A large crowd was present and enjoyed themselves very much, helping us also in a financial way. Capt. O'Neill and Bloss have paid us a short visit, and Capt. Earle, of the Rescue Home has farewelled and gone to assist at London. The Rescue Home Officers, Ensign Hicks and Staff, nobly assist in the battle against sin and the devil. Self-Denial is in full swing. The band has been serenading, and the soldiers collecting to smash our target. God has wonderfully helped us, and we have had the privilege of pointing seventeen sin-slaved souls to the Lamb of God since last report.—A. French.

God's Power Manifest.

Prescott.—We had grand meetings all day yesterday, from early morning until late at night. The power of God was manifested in our midst, and we were all blessed. The meetings were led by Adj. Newman. God bless him. Dear Mrs. Newman is not able to be at the front of the battle yet, and we ask the prayers of all God's children for her that she may soon be restored to health.—P. S. M. Barton.

LETTERS FROM THE GENERAL TO THE SOLDIERS OF THE SALVATION ARMY.

The Faith that Saves.

Little Elfrida, the Infant Daughter of Brigadier Morn.

Fourteen Sought the Lord.

Pilley's Island.—Much of the Spirit has been felt in our midst during the past week. Sunday was a day of blessing, and the power of the Holy Ghost came upon us. In the night meeting many were in tears, some left the meeting wounded, and fourteen came over on the Lord's side. Among the number was an ex-officer. The War Cry is sold out every week. Sergt. Mrs. Blackmore is a hard worker and energetically pushes the sales of the Cry. The soldiers are laying themselves out for a good summer's work for God, and a deepening of their own spiritual experience, which is a good, healthy sign. We are looking for great things in the line of soul-saving. Through God we shall do many wonderful things.—Chas. W. Tilliv.

A Very Special Time.

Riverside.—We had a wonderful time on Thursday night. The meeting was conducted by Staff-Capt. Cass and Burditt, Capt. Urquhart, and a host of others. Capt. Urquhart gave a selection on his mouth-organ and violin, and each officer had a few words, then Staff-Capt. Burditt spoke with power, and at the close of the meeting one dear sister came to the cross.—C. C. McCarney.

A Backslider Reclaimed.

St. John H. N.B.—Our Treasurer has returned from a winter's campaign nicely saved. We have said good-bye to Lieut. Lilley, and welcomed Lieut. DeBow. On Sunday afternoon one backslider was reclaimed, and we can report victory in our Self-Denial effort. "Souls for cash," is our motto.—E. Gram, Sec.

A Great Cheer.

Watford.—Adil. Kenway conducted the week-end meetings. The Adjutant was a great cheer and blessing to us. Our S.D. has been a glorious victory, and we have succeeded in smashing our target. The fight is hard, but God lives to give us the victory.—E. C.

Three Found Him.

Woodstock.—We have had some beautiful meetings lately. On Sunday afternoon a number of Christians were present and gave their experience. Last week-end we had Major and Mrs. McMillan and Lieut. Webber, from London, with us. We believe God did speak through them to the hearts of the people. On Sunday night three souls sought the Light of the World, and were able to sing, "I found Him, my Jesus." Hallelujah!—Reg. Cor.

The more we look up the less we need to look out for ourselves.

Some of the most precious and beautiful things in the Bible are neither precious nor beautiful to us because we look at them and not into them.

Very many troubles of life are nothing but your weakness. Stand up, and they are gone. They are like gnats, which, while one is still, settle and bite; but rising up and working, the whole swarm fly off, or do but buzz. The moment the man rises they alight. Thus activity is exemption, and sleep is defeat.

My Dear Comrades,—

I have been talking to you in my late letters about the nature and necessity of repentance. I hope you understood my meaning. I am sure you will find the knowledge useful. But you will know also that there is another act of the soul that must be performed before salvation can be realized, and that is faith. Nothing is more frequently insisted upon in the Bible, or more commonly dwelt on in our songs and teachings, than the answer made to the jailor who was convicted through the stoning of Paul and Silas, when he inquired for the way of salvation, and this was, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved."

There Are Different Kinds of Faith.

There is faith in the existence of God; faith in His oversight and care; faith in His presence with us in times of trouble; and faith in His being able to deliver us. There is faith in His co-operation in our work for Him, and there is the faith we exercise in Him, living, dying, and for ever.

I have already written several letters upon one or other of these kinds of faith; to-night I want to say something plain and simple about the faith that brings a poor sinner into the actual enjoyment of the pardoning mercy of God; the faith that makes a man the possessor of the new nature, and enables his Heavenly Father to adopt him into the family of heaven.

This great blessing I hope you enjoy for yourselves, my comrades. You remember well the time when you knelt at His feet and trusted Him, and when He answered that trust by making Himself known to you as your Saviour. Since then you have often sung—

"My Jesus to know, and to feel His blood flow.
'Tis life everlasting, 'tis heaven below."

So far, so good; but it is now more important than I can describe, that you should be able to rightly explain to every anxious soul that may ask you what he must believe in order to find the same blessed salvation. Let me try and show this—

1. He must believe that he is a sinner needing the mercy of God. Without this conviction that he is wrong and destined to be cast away into hell on account of his sins, there is little or no hope that he will humble himself to seek the forgiveness of God. Until a man believes that he is sick he is not likely to trust himself to the care of the physician.

If you want men to believe in the compassion and mercy of Christ, strive to make them believe in the evil of their own hearts, in the wickedness of their lives, and in the shameful ingratitude of their treatment of the Saviour who died for them. When they see the greatness of their sin they will cry for mercy.

2. He must believe that God means just what He says when He promises him salvation. Unless a man believes that God is really sincere when He declares His willingness to receive and save him if he comes in the way that He has laid down, you will never be able to carry him much further.

If the Sinner has any Doubts

on this point, you can easily show him by the sacrifice Jesus Christ has made, and the promise He has given, that He is not only willing but exceedingly anxious to receive and forgive all that will come to Him. If necessary, you must go over this again and again. Be very patient and be very simple. Until the soul comes to believe that God wants to save him he won't be likely to trust Him to do it.

3. He must believe that Jesus died for him on the cross, and that, therefore, he need not die. I am not speaking now of men and women to whom Christ has never been preached. Doubtless multitudes go into heaven through His sacrifice who will never hear the name of Christ, until they reach the Celestial Land. I am speaking of the souls before whose eyes He has been set forth again and again as crucified for them. One by one they must believe that His blood was actually shed for them upon that tree. They must each be able to say—

"I saw my sins His blood had split,
And belped to nail Him there."

4. He must believe that he comes to God in the very way that God desires. He knows—everyone knows—that there are conditions of salvation and that there is no mercy for any man until those conditions are complied with. It follows, therefore, that no man can believe that God receives and saves him unless he fulfils these conditions; that is, comes to God in the way that He has been pleased to direct.

Now, no one need find it difficult to discover whether he comes in the right way; indeed, he cannot very well come in a wrong way if he is only sincere and comes with all his heart. The plan is so exceedingly simple that a little thought will make this plain to every honest seeker.

His Own Heart will Testify

whether he is sorry for the sins of the past, and willing to give them up, to serve God in the future, and to accept mercy.

But if a man knows in his own conscience that there is some evil way to which he clings, or some duty that he is not willing to perform, or some pride that makes him unwilling to submit and cast himself on the mercy of God, he will not be able to believe for the salvation he desires.

5. Having gone so far, if a man is to exercise the faith that saves, he must go on to believe that God does actually receive and does forgive him then and there. Now this sounds very simple and very easy, but many mistakes are made respecting it. So please bear in mind that—

The exercise of the faith that saves does not mean that the seeker must believe that God has forgiven him. That would not be correct—else why is he still a seeker.

Nor does it mean that the seeker must believe that God will save him in the future. No one can be sure about that, though we can be sure that He stands ready and waiting to forgive at this moment, for now is the accepted time.

The faith that saves, therefore, does not say God has saved me, or God will save me, but it says God does save me.

Now mind, he must believe this. He is not merely to hope for it, nor desire it, nor feel it, but He is to believe it. The man who exercises saving faith says in his heart, "I am a sinner, deserving wrath. God wants to save me. He has promised me salvation if I come, and I do come now. I come this moment, I come as well as I can; if I knew any better way to approach Him I would come in that way, and I believe that for the sake of His dear Son, who died for my sins, He receives and saves me now."

Queen Alexandra's Religion.

No picture of the Queen's home life would be complete without a reference to its religious side. Strictly brought up in the Lutheran faith, Her Majesty has a deep reverence for spiritual things, and the little church in Sandringham Park has been hallowed to her by many tender memories of the grave-yard lies her youngest-born, the babe who lived but a day, and to the chancel her eldest son was temporarily laid ere he was taken for burial to Windsor.

A Thank-Offering.

In the pew which knew her first as a girl-bride, nearly forty years ago, the Queen has sat to receive spiritual comfort on many trying occasions. There, when the King was between life and death, in 1871, she mingled her prayers with those of the rustic congregation for his recovery, and the lecture presented after this period of trial bears the inscription, "A thank offering from Alexandra. 'When I was in trouble I called upon the Lord, and He heard me.'"

Warm Cioaks for the Children.

The service at Sandringham is very simple, the choir being composed of children from the schools of the estate, who are, however, extremely well trained by the organist. No surprises are worn, but red cloaks are conspicuous in winter, as it has long been the Queen's custom to give new red cloaks to the village girls at Christmas.

Cordial Hospitality.

One or other of the local clergy is generally invited to dine at Sandringham on Sunday evening, and a preacher from a distance is invariably entertained by their Majesties. The Queen has, throughout the years, been hostess to the most noted divines of the time, and many of these, like Stanley, Wilberforce, and Kingsley, have recorded their impressions of her simple Christian faith.

Interested in Mr. Spurgeon's Work.

It may not, however, be quite so well known that the Queen, as Princess of Wales, took a great interest in Mr. Spurgeon and his work at the Metropolitan Tabernacle. Shortly after coming to the country she drove, with Queen Victoria, one afternoon, to see the Tabernacle, and the road in the neighborhood being in process of repair, the Royal carriage had to make its way through the devious side streets, and its unlooked-for appearance created some stir amongst the inhabitants.—Sarah A. Tooley, in the Christian Endeavor World.

A RIFT IN THE FOG.

AN INTERESTING SKETCH OF AN INCIDENT TYPICAL OF MANY.

MY pretty one! My Bebe! That you and I should have come to this! Knowest thou that thou art without a home, Mignonne? That thou hast no father to hold thee in his arms and look into the dark shadows of thine eyes? Shut away is he within their cruel walls, Bebe—walls as cruel and hard as the cold English themselves, who are born without fire in their veins.

"There, little one, hide closer—it is cold—cold—cold—and round thee and thy mother is wrapped a cloak—a mantle as of the grave—a smothering cloud of thickness, and sulphur, and gloom, in which we are lost—choked—chilled almost to death. Out! It is as though the spirits of a thousand slanders, of a thousand treacheries and injustices, of a thousand dark schemes of prison and death had risen, had risen to-night and breathed one mighty breath over this grim city, and the city shivers, and chokes, and moans in the thick gloom. Oh, Bebe, Bebe! to what have we come?"

"Mignonne, didst thou remember thine old home in the land of the happy sun? In thy dark eyes is a far-past look: art thou dreaming of the long summer of the South—the skies of blue, of

of lakes amid the mountains—of the glowing sunset and nights of peace? Oh, Bebe, but my heart breaks to be back!

"How blissful were the days before thy father gave himself to that wicked crew who gambled away that pretty home, who led him to stake—and lost his spotless name to fill their purses, and to save what they called the honor of their club. Was it honor to break the happiness of our home, to shatter our dreams, to force us away to this cold land of sorrow, and want, and loneliness, where thou and I are wandering together? And, oh, petite, I am so lonely, despite even thee! None but thou wilt understand my speech, and thou hast no tongue but to babble pretty nothings to thy mother! They stare and laugh, and shake their heads, and pass on, and I cannot even find the prison where they have shut away thy father, Bebe. If we could but find that, and lie down beneath the shadow of its walls, we might not find the world so wild and cold.

"Ah! thou didst weep last night, Mignonne, when the gendarme turned upon us his bull's-eye, and bade us up and away. 'Whither?' I asked him, and he said,

'Home! Home!'

Thou and I have no home—not even a shelter, not a door-step where they will let us sit the long night through. Thou shalt not be frightened again to-night, my little shy bird: we have walked and walked all day, and we will walk until the morning comes again.

"If I can only hold up so long, Bebe, all will go well, but this fog blinds me; I am dizzy and sick—faint, perhaps, for the yesterday's dinner I had not—and choked, suffocated, and paralyzed. Shiver not, pretty one! Thy mother will not drop thee while there is life in her arms to hold. Just a moment and thou wilt rest here in this arch, and then, on again, and on. Helas! but I am tired to the very death; my head aches, and the solid earth seems to spin like a top. Bebe, I am spent. It may be that we shall just lie here and freeze, and be found in the morning stiff, and cold, and dead. Will—anybody—care?"

And, stretch thy little limbs, Mignonne; hold them to the warmth—so! Thou art smiling, and thou must smile, for there are hearts in this cold city, and the hearts have opened doors of love to thee and to thy mother. Mignonne—what more? It brings the hint of to thy cheeks; but thou art surely become greedy—it is a whole panoply thou hast taken! There lie closer to the warm blanket they have wrapped thee in; there are hours of cosy sleep for thee, and thy mother lies near with a warm place in her heart in which they have planted the sweet flower of hope.

"Bebe, thy father used to tell me there was no God, nor any above who cared for the creatures who trod the wide earth; but these people say it was their God of love who sent them to find us as we froze in the arch; that He knew and cared, and bade the gendarme wake and march us forth. It seemed cruel and hard—the night so cold, and the fog so thick, and I scarce could understand his words as he pushed me towards the little street, and bade me seek a lamp and bell.

"It was murkier than ever down there, Bebe. As I stumbled on, I thought of the river, and how one plunge would bring eternal forgetfulness to thee and me, and then there came a rift in the fog, and I saw the lamp that told of 'Shelter,' and I rang for help. It is almost a dream, little one, but there came light, and fire, and strong arms, and a voice that spoke sweetly of welcome. It all faded away for a little; but I walked to find them nursing you, Mignonne—kind women and true are they—and one held me on her arm, and poured warm soup through my lips, and venly whisper comes to us in just two words, 'Only wait.'

The words make things seem brighter, and our cross grows lighter, and Jesus seems nearer. Only wait, and we shall see Him who died for us. Only wait, and we shall see Him who lives for us. Only wait, and we shall lay down the cross and take up the crown. Only wait, and no more sorrow, or temptation, or dark hours will come to us. Only wait, and all will be bright. For a month? No. For a year? No. For eternity? Yes, praise God!

Is it not worth waiting for, dear reader? I fancy I hear many say, 'Yes, it is.'

A few weeks ago I stood at the bedside of a comrade whom God had seen fit to call to His home on high. It seemed almost impossible to comfort the weeping children who gathered around her coffin. Yet I think if that dear mother could have spoken she would have spoken those two beautiful words, 'Only wait—I shall soon see you again.' Why should we mourn or complain when darkness and temptations come? Only wait, and all will be over, we shall see our blessed Redeemer, and receive a crown of everlasting life.

The words 'Only wait,' have been a great blessing to me, and I felt I must write these few words. If anyone who reads these simple lines feels sad and weary, and almost like giving up, think of the words, 'Only wait.'

Straight running makes better speed than the swiftest circling.

Mrs. Fox and Dawson, and the Donkin Glacier, B.C.

"It was they who put us snugly here to rest, petite, and one knelt down near me while I told her of your father and our search for him, and she promised that they would find the place, and take a message from me to the very cell. Better than that—Hitch, sleepy one!—these women of the Army of Salvation told me where I should find a home for thee and me, and in the heart of a beautiful future they will bring thy father to us again, and will find him the means to keep us three in a happy home again.

"Oh, Bebe, Bebe, thy little eyes are closing and thou dost not listen! But, I tell thee, there must be a God, or there would not be so much love."

—From "Friends of the Poor."

ONLY WAIT.

By LIEUT. R. GREAVETT.

A short time ago, while in a Salvation Army meeting, I heard a beautiful song, "Only Wait." While listening to the words they seemed to strike my heart, and I thought to myself, "Only two words, yet how much they mean to many of us who are following in the footsteps of the Saviour." How often we have felt that our cross has been too heavy, and our pathway has been so dark it has almost hid the Saviour's face, and we felt we were alone. Then like a sunbeam the heav-stanes, to sell the mill. 'The King immediately wrote, with his own hand, the following reply:—"My dear neighbor, I cannot allow you to sell the mill; it must remain in your possession as long as one member of your family exists; for it belongs to the history of Prussia. I lament, however, to learn that you are in circumstances of embarrassment, and therefore send you $6,000 to arrange your affairs, in the hope that this sum will be sufficient for the purpose. Consider me always your affectionate neighbor, Frederick William."

Gems of Thought.

From Private Letters of the Great Composer, Charles Gounod.

We are not in this world to do what we wish, but to be willing to do that which it is our duty to do.

The further we advance in this life, the more intimately do we become acquainted with the liberty of never being free.

Alas! the more time is full the faster it flies; it is only when time is unoccupied that it hangs long and heavily on one's hands.

Friendship and music, at one and the same time, form a small part of that state of bliss which will consist of the "simultaneousness of all joys."

I have finished my course, and the only thing that remains to be done is for me to lay down my arms. I have fought a good fight with all my heart, and with all my soul. The rest will be in the world to come.

If we were sufficiently advanced to feel ourselves near to one another in body, at the very moment that our thoughts rush together, there would be hardly any more heart-rending separations in this world. Alas! it seems that we do not yet deserve to attain such heights.

I believe that our modern society is dying from this cause. Agitation takes the place of activity, that is the truth of the matter; feverishness has replaced life; it is against feverishness that we must wage war, unless we wish it to destroy us. And this fever is everywhere and in everything.

Truth has always been the last word, even in this world or after we leave it. I await it therefore with confidence, certain that He who allows the trial will help me to bring it to light, and I do not worry as to how it will come about; this is the secret of the Most High, into which we have neither the right nor the need to penetrate.

Nothing that is really good can be suppressed, everything is added on. With affection it is the same as with the masterpieces of great artists, the remembrance of the one never makes us forget the others. And I know of nothing more delightful than to be able to speak of those one loves with those whom one loves, as if they were all members of the one family of the heart.

I Have Christ, What Want I More?

By SERGEANT-MAJOR MRS. BABCOCK.

In the heart of London city, 'Midst the dwellings of the poor, These bright, golden words were uttered.

"I have Christ, what want I more? Is a lonely, dying widow.

Stretched upon a garret floor; Having not one earthly comfort—

"I have Christ, what want I more? But her words will live for ever.

I repeat them o'er and o'er. God delights to hear me saying,

"I have Christ, what want I more?" Oh, that all who read this story,

Though by cares are tried and sore, Thus might say, with deep thanksgiving,

"I have Christ, what want I more?"

The East to Run Things—Nigger Not so Well as Usual—Lieut. Currell Not Defeated Yet—Rise New-foundland—Where's Skagway?

I guess I'll let the East run things for a while longer. They seem to be able to do the job.

Poor, deplined Nigger! When will he earn a more glorious cognomen? (For the meaning of this word, see Webster's 5 o'clock special.)

Ha, ha! Lieut. Currell is in her accustomed place. She just merely dropped a few last week to encourage others, perhaps. Does Mrs. Dowell, of Halifax, intend to try conclusions with the Hamilton champion?

Well done, Newfoundland! You're worthy of better things, I know, and it's yourselves you ought to shine.

The Cadets are not affected by the climatic changes. The list looks good this week. Cadets Jones and Darch are evidently "striving for the mastery."

The champion Hustlers are Lieut. Currell (350), Mrs. Dowell (300), Capt. Hockin (293), Lieut. March (220).

We miss the familiar Skagway names this week, and don't feel quite as cheerful as usual.

Induce the patient to take the water hot, if possible, or at least warm, as this favors perspiration, which is important in this disease. If the child cannot drink a sufficient quantity of water, which should not be less than two quarts to twenty-four hours, water should be administered by enema.

CHAPTER XLII.

DIPHTHERIA.

1. It must be remembered that diphtheria is a germ disease, i.e., it is due to the reception into the system of germs of a specific character. The gravity of the disease, in any particular case, depends upon the condition of the system of the patient when the 47 Huslers.

1. It is hardly possible to distinguish between a case of mild diphtheria and a case of tonsillitis. The theory is held by some eminent authors that there is no essential difference between the two maladies, but that diphtheria, which, in its most characteristic form, presents, as one of its features, a peculiar membrane upon the diseased surface, is followed by a sore throat of unusual malignancy.

2. It is evident that in the treatment of this disease, agents capable of destroying germs, or of delaying their development, must be of service. The difficulty is to find an agent which is so effective that it employed in sufficient strength to destroy the germs, they are injurious to the tissues. Spirits of turpentine is about the only exception to this rule, and is therefore considered an excellent agent in cases of this kind. It is best taken by means of the steam inhaler, and should be used regularly, several times a day, for at least five minutes. The steam of the turpentine is exposed to the disease. Use one-half teaspoonful of turpentine of the outer cup of the steam inhaler, placing only a few drops of turpentine in the inner, also, to keep constantly evaporating upon the stove or over a lamp in the sick room, a half-ounce of turpentine in a basin of water. As soon as the throat is somewhat relieved, and the inflammation there is a decided rise of temperature, cold applications should be made to the throat and tonsils by means of an ice-bag, or cloths wrung out in ice water. The steam of the turpentine fomentations should be applied to the throat for fifteen minutes. If there is much pain, fomentations should be applied for ten minutes, hourly.

If the inhalation of turpentine is not sufficient to relieve the inflammation of the throat, the steam inhalation may be

When a different membrane makes its appearance, the same measures should be continued assiduously, and the membrane should be removed as soon as it is a solution of papeyotox or vegetable persin. The following is a good formula: Papeyotox, 75 grains; distilled water, one ounce. Apply to the solution of persin. Apply to the membrane patch with a camel's hair brush. It is also well to apply to the throat, hourly, in the form of a spray, a saturated solution of chlorate of potash. In the case of adults, a saturated solution of chlorate of potash may be used; for young children, the solution should be diluted with an equal quantity of water. The saturated solution of chlorate may be used, for both adults and children, in the saturated solution. It should be applied with an air atomizer.

3. In favorable cases, the membrane and the throat should be irrigated with steam, and sometimes in twelve or twenty-four hours. The separation of the membrane is favored by the inhalation of steam.

4. The following is valuable for this purpose:

CHAPTER XXXII.

Maximilian II. . . . . A.D. 1564

Maximilian II. was thirty-seven years of age when he succeeded his father. He was a kindly, warm-hearted man, beloved by all, and he allowed so much freedom to the Lutherans that he was sometimes accused of being one himself. He could speak six languages with ease, and King Henry III. of France declared that he was the most accomplished gentleman he ever met. He was so industrious that his chancellor said that if he had not been Emperor he would have been the best of chancellors, and he was always ready to hear the petitions of the meanest of his subjects. The Bohemian subjects said of him that they were as happy under him as if he had been their father, and all his people would

He never gave the name character of him. His own dominion was the same whether he did in Hungary, and Bohemia, he held little power over the princes of the Empire, and they would not listen to his counsels. He was not used to the custom of the Germans to go forth to fight, and to themselves Landsknechte, and bring themselves out to fight, no matter in what cause, provided they were well paid. He was a good plunderer. This he took them away from, and he made work; there were not men enough left to till the ground, and such as came back were horribly idle, lawless, and without any peaceful life. Maximilian tried to get the forbidd the men of Germany from taking service with other princes, but he could not succeed, and Germans fought as though they were in France and the Netherlands. However, he agreed with the Kaiser in trying to put down this horrible lawlessness of some of his subjects. There was a knight called Wilhelm of Wied, who had ravaged Franconia with fire and sword.

and bad ended by murdering the Bishop of Wurtzburg. He had been put under the ban of the Empire, but Friedrich of Saxony, son of the deprived Elector, Johann Friedrich, thought proper to give him shelter at Gotha, and for seven years the edict could not be performed, but at last the Elector August came before Gotha with a army, and forced it to surrender, when Gumbach, after being barbarously tortured, was torn to pieces by wild horses, and Friedrich was imprisoned, and deprived of his lands, which were divided between his two sons.

Maximilian was a firm ally of Queen Elizabeth, and there was a plan at one time of one of his many sons marrying her, but this came to nothing. His daughter Elizabeth married Charles IX. of France, and was quite broken-hearted by the cruelties she saw at his court. Maximilian himself showed the greatest grief and indignation at the Massacre of St. Bartholomew, and always stood up for what was just and merciful.

His wife was Maria, daughter of Charles V., for the Austrian princes were far too apt to marry their cousins, and having no infusion of fresh blood, they were naturally duller, and none of the five sons of Maximilian were equal to himself. The third of them, who bore the same name as his father, was elected King of the Romans, and afterwards another prince chose Sigmund, the Swedish duke, to be his rival. The emperor defeated him. His only son, who was made Grand Master of the remnants of the Teutonic Order. The estates of that Order in Eastern Prussia could not be got to elect any other prince than Brandenburg, to whom the Grand Master Albrecht had left them, for the Protestant princes mustered very strongly in the Diet, and would not give their votes to any other prince, in which they had seized, and had been determined not to go to war with them.
